

Strathclyde Business School revealed as no 1 for research

Strathclyde Business School has been rated top in Scotland - by a long way - and rated in the top 10 UK-wide in the latest comprehensive rating of research.

This news affirms the School as a leader for "world leading and internationally excellent" research.

The Research Assessment Exercise 2008 results show Strathclyde has a 15 per cent lead on the next best business school in Scotland, and is 25 per cent ahead of the next two business school ratings. The results of the Research Assessment Exercise 2008 show Strathclyde is number one in Scotland for research, followed by St Andrews, Glasgow and Edinburgh. A quarter of Strathclyde's research profile was ranked at the very highest level of 'world leading'.

In comparison to the rest of the UK, Strathclyde Business School ranks in the top ten, at seventh equal. This puts Strathclyde in a band with Lancaster, Warwick, Manchester and Oxford, all of whom are regularly cited as being among the best in class.

Professor Susan Hart, Dean of Strathclyde Business School, said: "These results are testimony to the hard work and commitment of colleagues right across Strathclyde Business School.

"Our academic staff have made significant in-roads into producing much needed research that has had a high impact on business thinking for organizations worldwide, as well as on many aspects of practice and policy.

"Over the next five years, we will strive to take this to even higher levels, ensuring our research and its implications are of value to organizations in Scotland and beyond. These times call for intellectual thinking that is put into business practice, and that is very much the business we are in."

Strathclyde Business School has continued to perform well over recent years across university league tables.

Its solid performance in research, now underpinned by these results, is strengthened further by its reputation and performance in teaching and knowledge exchange, as evidenced in its international accreditation standards from the European Foundation for Management Education (EQUIS), the Association of MBAs (AMBA) and the American Association for the Advancement of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB).

Strathclyde Business School remains in the 1 per cent of Schools world wide, and the only business school in Scotland, to have received this accolade.

The Strathclyde MBA has been in Malaysia for the past twenty years and more than 900 graduates of the Strathclyde MBA in Malaysia have realized the benefits of this renowned programme.

The Strathclyde MBA is conducted part-time at CDC Management Development, the International Partner for the MBA program in Malaysia. For more information, please call 03-7660 8950 or email to enquiries@cdc.edu.my. Full time postgraduate programmes enquiries to Glasgow are welcomed.